

Satellite radio is the latest in a long string of innovations in communications that existing interest groups are trying to squash. The programming and services offered by XM Radio in particular are innovative, useful and provide an alternative to existing radio stations. I have chosen to pay a subscription fee for this programming and do not believe that the programming should be limited by those who fear competition in the marketplace. I pay for this service because it delivers what I want when I want it. Let existing radio stations take up the challenge and improve their offerings. Please refrain from dictating to satellite radio providers what kind of programming they offer.
